A year ago, Leila Slimani received the prestigious Goncourt Prize for her second novel, "Sweet Song" ("Chanson Douce"). This Monday, when she goes to the Elysee Palace at 3 pm, for an appointment with Emmanuel Macron, the author of 36 years should become, according to Elysee source, the "Personal representative of the president for the Francophonie".-----

The choice of President Macron's interview at Eysee today with Leila Slimani, whose choice is as symbolic as the appointee to represent France at the Francophonie, is not entirely by chance. Indeed today, also coincides to the new Prix Goncourt 2017, ceremony, one of the most praiseworthy French literary awards. All a symbol!-----

Leila Slimani is a 36 years old Franco-Moroccan author whose "Sweet Song" novel, won last year the Goncourt Prize, has long been the focus of attention by President Macron and his wife, Brigitte, both of whom are French literary critics and passionate. It is also a symbolic choice that President Macron decrees, by his choice of a woman, in her thirties, emancipated and talented, as to send a message of hope towards the same generations of age, in these stormy times following the affairs of the sexual harassment towards women.
